

One day, down in the hot plains in Africa, lived a rhino and a monkey. The rhino and monkey were best friends, and lived every day of their lives with each other, playing and laughing all the while.

Despite the extreme environment, the home of the two animals was very rich with delicious fruit hanging on the tall trees, just out of the reach of the rhino. Whenever the rhino wanted to eat some fruit, he asked the monkey to climb up the trees and retrieve it for him, and the monkey gladly complied.

This cycle continued for many days, weeks, months, and years, with the monkey helping the rhino each and every day. Every time the rhino was aided by the monkey, he felt annoyed that he could not retrieve the fruit himself, and thought day and night for a way to solve his problem.

One day, while exploring with the monkey, the rhino found a grey stone that was pointed like a dagger. The rhino saw this stone and an idea popped into his head, an idea that would let him obtain amazing fruit for himself whenever he wanted, without having to ask his friend for help again. The rhino knew he would need the help of the monkey, but he knew it would be the last time he would have to ask for assistance from his friend.

The monkey cracked open a piece of fruit, taking the juice that was stored inside and smearing it across the rhino's forehead. The monkey then took the pointed stone, and placed it upon the rhino's forehead, leaving it to rest and slowly merge into part of the rhino. The next day, the two friends woke up and say that the stone was permanently attached, becoming some sort of horn.

And so, whenever the rhino was hungry, he tilted up his head toward the fruit that was dangling on the branch, and with one quick tug of his horn it fell to the ground, allowing the rhino to simply tilt his head downward and indulge. After that day, for many days, months, weeks, and years, the rhino would do exactly that, and once he finished his meal he would go back to playing with his best friend.

One day, down in the hot plains in Africa, lived a rhino and a monkey. The rhino and monkey were best friends, and lived every day of their lives with each other, playing and laughing all the while.

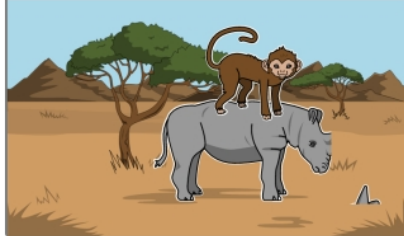

Despite the extreme environment, the home of the two animals was very rich with delicious fruit hanging on the tall trees, just out of the reach of the rhino. Whenever the rhino wanted to eat some fruit, he asked the monkey to climb up the trees and retrieve it for him, and the monkey gladly complied.

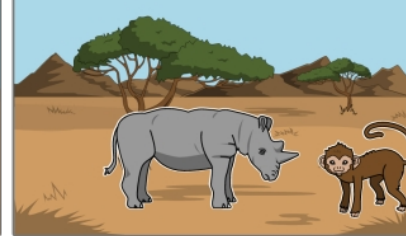

This cycle continued for many days, weeks, months, and years, with the monkey helping the rhino each and every day. Every time the rhino was aided by the monkey, he felt annoyed that he could not retrieve the fruit himself, and thought day and night for a way to solve his problem.

One day, while exploring with the monkey, the rhino found a grey stone that was pointed like a dagger. The rhino saw this stone and an idea popped into his head, an idea that would let him obtain amazing fruit for himself whenever he wanted, without having to ask his friend for help again. The rhino knew he would need the help of the monkey, but he knew it would be the last time he would have to ask for assistance from his friend.

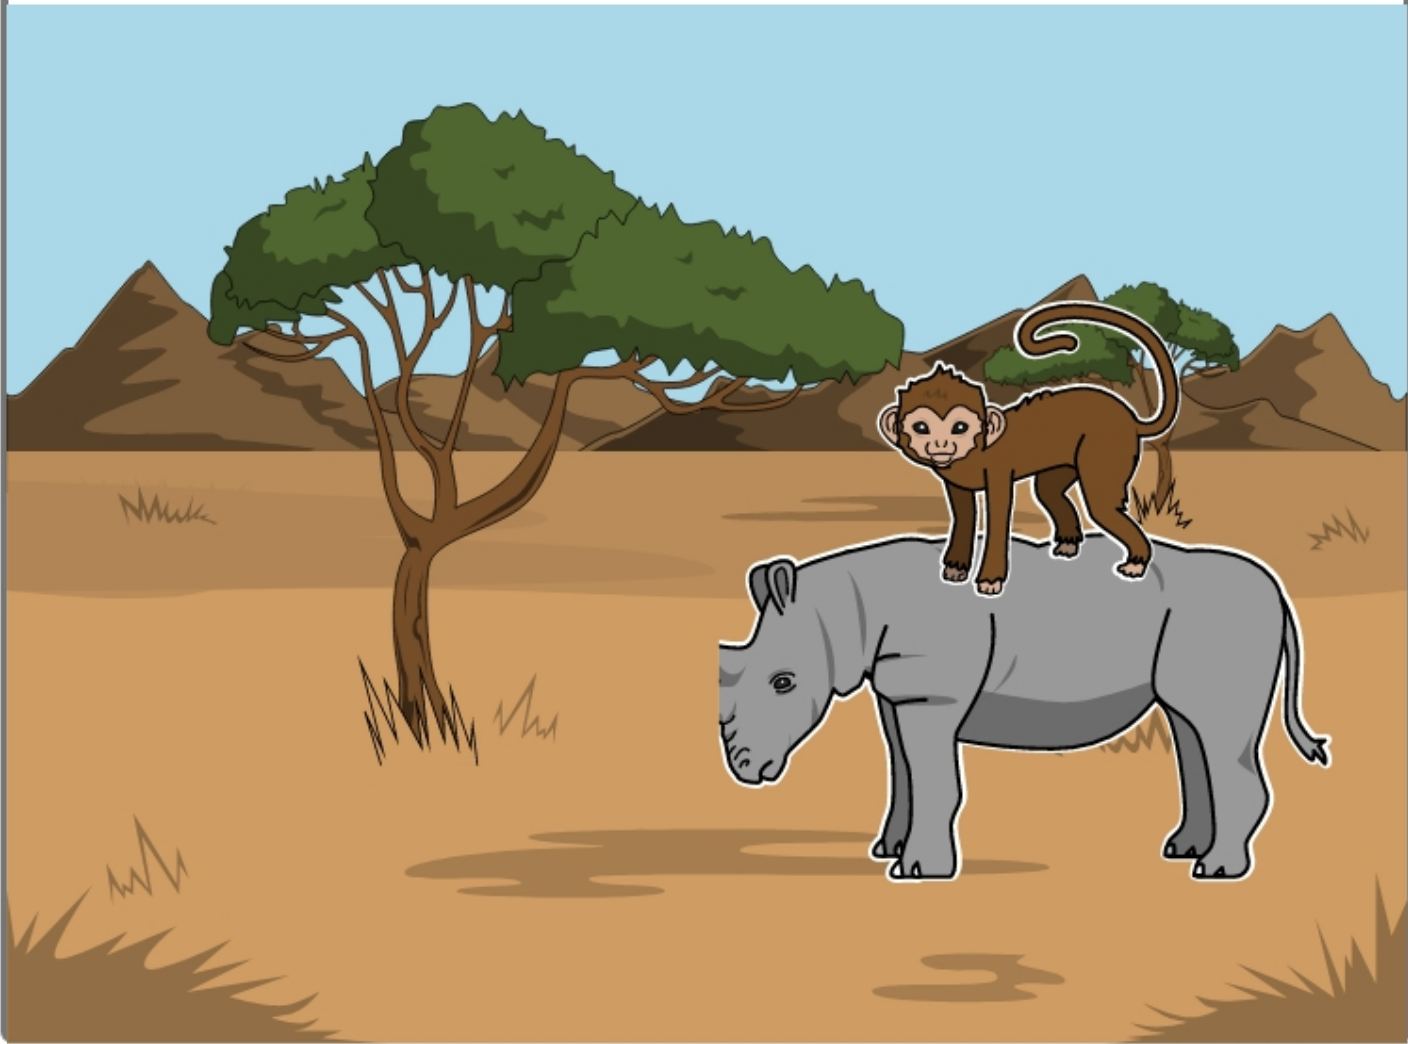

The monkey cracked open a piece of fruit, taking the juice that was stored inside and smearing it across the rhinos forehead. The monkey then took the pointed stone, and placed it upon the rhinos forehead, leaving it to rest and slowly merge into part of the rhino. The next day, the two friends woke up and say that the stone was permanently attached, becoming some sort of horn.

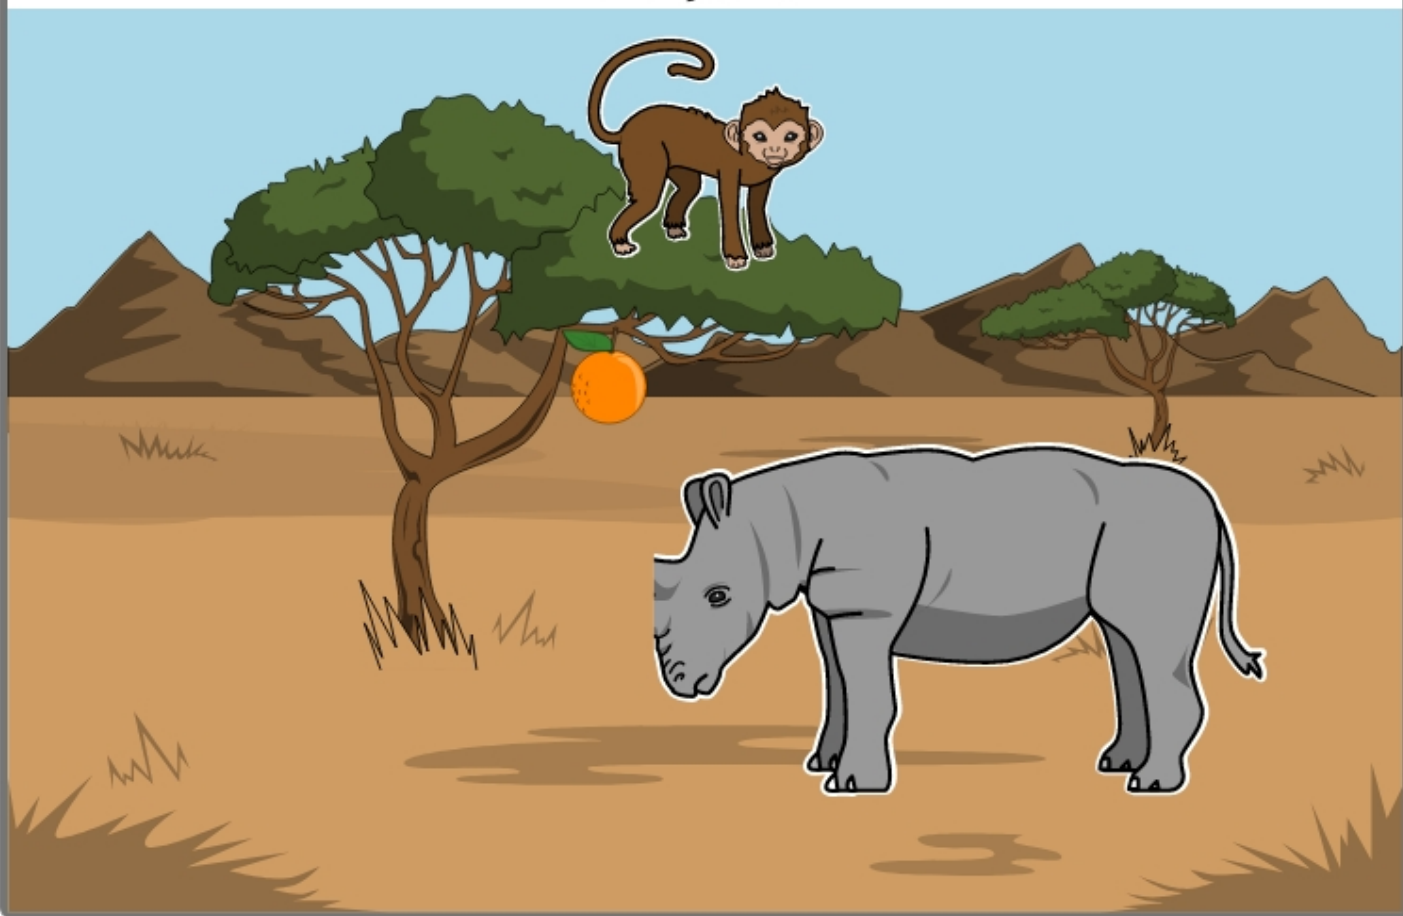

And so, whenever the rhino was hungry, he tilted up his head toward the fruit that was dangling on the branch, and with one quick tug of his horn it fell to the ground, allowing the rhino to simply tilt his head downward and indulge. After that day, for many days, months, weeks, and years, the rhino would do exactly that, and once he finished his meal he would go back to playing with his best friend.

